

Shaun Riggs

Shaun Riggs completed six years of service on the United Way board of directors in March of 2022. Shaun has been a very active member and supporter, serving on the Executive Committee as both treasurer and board president. He is also very inquisitive, passionate about the work of charitable organizations, and the first one to tell a good joke.

Shaun owns the Dugout Bar and Grill in Farmington, and lives in Wilton with his wife and two stepchildren. Shaun began his work in the restaurant business when he was thirteen, working weekends in his grandmother's breakfast diner in Palermo. He supported himself through college by working in restaurants. He spent a short stint at the Maine State Housing Authority as a consultant who planned the Annual Governor's Conference on Affordable Housing. After leaving UMF, he moved to Monrovia, Liberia, where he lived and worked for a catering business.

When Shaun is not at the Dugout, he enjoys spending time and volunteering at his local Elks Lodge in Farmington. He is an avid but far-from-professional golfer and fisherman and enjoys time at his family's camp on Moosehead Lake.

"I began my time on the UWTVA board not knowing which end was up. More than anything, the tone set by our amazing staff motivated me to jump in with both feet. They are truly to thank for the impact United Way has on our community. Thank you to them, fellow board members and all the volunteers who give so much of themselves. I will miss board service, but I look forward to an ongoing relationship with UWTVA as a Corporate Champion Circle member and volunteer."
